Summary

Choi Woo-jin is an offensively minded left back who operates high up the pitch, contributing as an attacking option during buildups. His dribbling, crossing, and set-piece potential show that he has the technical tools to be a threat on the left side.

However, his defensive skills, particularly marking, tackling, and positioning, require significant improvement if he is to succeed as a fullback. Choi also struggles with impatience and decision-making, which hinders his ability to impact the game consistently. Given his tendencies and current limitations, he may be better suited for a role as a left wing-back in a five-defender system or even as a winger.

To progress to a higher level, particularly if aiming for a move to Europe, he needs to improve his defensive attributes and become more consistent in his overall game.
